

My name is Alex Thompson, and I was born on a crisp autumn day in 1992 in the bustling city of Chicago. Growing up as the youngest of three siblings, I quickly learned the art of competition and negotiation. My parents, both educators, instilled in us a love for learning and a strong sense of curiosity. Our home was filled with books, from classic literature to scientific journals, and dinner table conversations often revolved around the latest discoveries or historical events.